Dear Mr. Snow,

I just spent a lovely day on the Sacramento River, rafting and swimming. I plucked wild blackberries beside our boat and ate them stretched out on a rock in the sun. The activities I've just described could have been done thousands of years ago. Yet, in a relatively few number of years, California has managed to dam up almost every river in our state! Please, no more! Let's use the state of our technology and the ingenuity of our people to stretch existing water and power supplies and, when that's done, invent new ones. I want to be sure that my children can one day do what I did today.

Thank you,
Jaime Wong-Dominguez
